Do not allow your child to swim while he or she has diarrhea and for 1 week after your child's diarrhea stops. This fact sheet is for information only and is not meant to be used for self-diagnosis or as a substitute for consultation with a health care provider. Is your well located at the bottom of a hill or is it considered shallow? Well water can become contaminated with feces if animal waste seepage contaminates the ground water. Shower with soap and water before entering recreational water. If you have any questions about the disease described above or think that you may have a parasitic infection, consult a health care provider. There is no FDA approved treatment for Blastocystis 'hominis' infection. Physicians have reported success in some patients with several prescription drugs, but the success rates for treatment of Blastocystis 'hominis' are much lower than for other diseases. Many patients remain symptomatic after treatment. People who drink water or use ice made from contaminated sources (e.g., lakes, streams, shallow or poorly monitored or maintained wells). During the past 2 decades, Blastocystis 'hominis' infection has become recognized as a common cause of waterborne disease in humans in the United States. Wash and/or peel all raw vegetables and fruits before eating. Several community-wide outbreaks of Blastocystosis have been linked to drinking water contaminated with Blastocystis 'hominis'. by taking the following steps Take children on frequent bathroom breaks or check their diapers often. Having contact with someone who is ill with Blastocystosis. If yes, your well may be the source of infection. That is difficult to say. In animal studies, symptoms of Blastocystosis appear within two weeks after becoming infected. In humans, some people may have few symptoms when initially infected, but the symptoms may become worse over a period of months or years. How can I prevent a Blastocystis 'hominis' infection? Although tests for fecal coliforms or E. Is your well in a rural area where animals graze? Drinking water or using ice made from contaminated sources (e.g., lakes, streams, shallow [less than 50 feet] or poorly monitored or maintained wells). Commercially packaged non-carbonated soft drinks and fruit juices that do not require refrigeration until after they are opened (those that are stored unrefrigerated on grocery shelves) also are safe. Is this true? In some diseases, public officials have recommended that children be removed from child care environments while they have diarrhea. However, because diarrhea from Blastocystosis can last indefinitely, illness, this may not be feasible for this disease. After changing a diaper or assisting with toileting, especially if you are caring for diaper-aged children, even if you are wearing gloves. People who swallow contaminated water while swimming, especially in lakes, rivers, springs, ponds, and streams. You should consider having your well water tested if you can answer "yes" to any of the following questions: Are members of your family or others who use your well water becoming ill? In the United States, nationally distributed brands of bottled or canned carbonated water and soft drinks are safe to drink in terms of Blastocystis 'hominis' contamination. Do not swallow recreational water. Because the parasite is protected by an outer shell, it can survive outside the body and in the environment for long periods in some cases. Follow these guidelines to avoid spreading Blastocystis 'hominis' to others: Wash your hands with soap and water after using the toilet and before handling food. Use of a fingernail brush to clean under the fingernails may help. Do not drink untreated water or use ice made from untreated drinking water in countries where the water supply might be unsafe. My health care provider says treatment is not necessary. Wash hands immediately after handling a condom used during anal sex or after touching the anus or rectal area. What is the treatment for Blastocystosis? Wash hands thoroughly with soap and water. This is especially important while experiencing diarrhea caused by Blastocystosis. Yes, Blastocystis 'hominis' infection can be very contagious. Avoid fecal exposure during sexual activity. If the tests are positive, it is possible that the water may also be contaminated with Blastocystis 'hominis' or other harmful parasites, bacteria and viruses. Contact your local health department or your county cooperative extension service to find out who offers water testing in your area. Protect others by not swimming if you are experiencing diarrhea and for 1 week after your diarrhea stops. After touching something that could be contaminated (such as a trash can, cleaning cloth, drain, or soil). Your health care provider will likely ask you to submit stool samples to check for the parasite. It depends. Millions of germs can be released in a bowel movement of an infected human or animal. These tests are only useful if your well is not routinely disinfected with chlorine, since chlorine kills fecal coliforms and E. If you cannot heat the water to a rolling boil or use a recommended filter, then try chemically treating the water by chlorination or iodination. You can become infected after accidentally swallowing the parasite, you cannot become infected through contact with blood. For more information on other germs and chemicals that can contaminate well water, see Contaminants in Well Water. This is especially important while experiencing diarrhea caused by Blastocystosis. Eating uncooked food contaminated with Blastocystis 'hominis'. After handling animals or their toys, leashes, or feces. Use a barrier during oral-anal sex. Keep Blastocystis 'hominis' and other germs out of pools, hot tubs, lakes, rivers, the ocean, etc. Use safe, uncontaminated water to wash all food that is to be eaten raw. Blastocystis 'hominis' can be spread by: Accidentally swallowing Blastocystis 'hominis' picked up from surfaces (such as bathroom fixtures, changing tables, diaper pails, or toys) contaminated with feces from an infected person or animal. How is a Blastocystis 'hominis' infection diagnosed? Backpackers, hikers, and campers who drink untreated or insufficiently treated water or who do not practice good hygiene (e.g., proper hand washing). If my child or I have been diagnosed with Blastocystosis, should I worry about spreading the infection to others? People exposed to human feces through sexual contact. Tests used to specifically identify Blastocystis 'hominis' are expensive, difficult, and usually require hundreds of gallons of water to be pumped through a filter. If the fecal coliform test comes back positive, indicating that your well is fecally contaminated, stop drinking the well water and contact your local water authority for instructions on how to disinfect your well. Who is most likely to get Blastocystosis? coli instead of Blastocystis 'hominis'. If your child is diagnosed with Blastocystosis, follow these guidelines to help your child avoid spreading Blastocystis 'hominis' infection to others: Wash your hands and your child's hands after changing the child's diapers or assisting your child with toileting. What are the symptoms of Blastocystosis? Traveling to countries where Blastocystosis is common and being exposed to the parasite as described in the bullets above. Persons more likely to become infected include international travelers. What should I do if I think I may have Blastocystosis? The Blastocystis 'hominis' parasite lives in the intestine of infected humans or animals (e.g., cats, dogs, pigs, horses, cattle). Once a person or animal has been infected with Blastocystis 'hominis', the parasite lives in the intestine and is passed in feces. Avoid water that might be contaminated. Contaminated water may include water that has not been boiled, filtered, or disinfected with chemicals. Children in child care settings, including diaper-aged children. Close contacts (such as those in the same family or in the same household or child care setting) or caregivers of infected people. Change diapers in the bathroom or a diaper-changing area. coli do not specifically tell you whether Blastocystis 'hominis' is present, these tests might show whether your well water has been contaminated by feces. Do not drink untreated water or use ice made from untreated water during community-wide outbreaks of disease caused by contaminated drinking water. Anyone can get Blastocystosis. Avoid eating uncooked foods when traveling in countries with minimal water treatment and sanitation systems. Blastocystis 'hominis' can be found worldwide and within every region of the United States. How do you get Blastocystosis and how is it spread? How long will symptoms last? Wash children thoroughly, especially their bottoms, with soap and water after they use the toilet or their diapers are changed and before they enter the water. Do not swim in recreational water (pools, hot tubs, lakes, rivers, the ocean, etc.) while you have diarrhea and for 1 week after your diarrhea stops. In some patients, Blastocystosis is an acute illness, meaning that symptoms will last for a short time (several weeks). In other patients, the disease may become chronic, and symptoms will last indefinitely. Researchers are working to understand why some infections produce chronic illness, while others clear on their own. For information on well testing, see Well Water Testing Frequently Asked Questions. Do not drink untreated water from shallow wells, lakes, rivers, springs, ponds, and streams. Because Blastocystis 'hominis' can be difficult to diagnose, your provider might ask you to submit multiple stool specimens collected over a few days. Even in that case, the diagnostics may fail to detect the infection. Researchers have developed more reliable diagnostics, but those are not widely available to patients. BRF is working to make more reliable diagnostics available to patients. Because treatments are unreliable, it may not be appropriate to treat an asymptomatic patient. Researchers and patients have also reported that symptoms began after antibiotic treatment, so it is possible that antibiotic treatment could make an individual case worse. You can pass Blastocystis 'hominis' in your feces and contaminate the water after your symptoms have stopped. This is essential for children in diapers. Blastocystis 'hominis' is found on surfaces or in soil, food, or water that has been contaminated with the feces from infected humans or animals. Blastocystosis (BLAST-oh-sis-TOS-is) is an illness caused by a microscopic parasite, Blastocystis 'hominis' (also known as Blastocystis 'hominis' hominis). If you answered "yes" to the above questions, consider testing your well for fecal contamination by testing it for the presence of coliforms or E. If my water comes from a well, should I have my well water tested? coli. If you are unable to avoid using or drinking water that might be contaminated, then you can make the water safer to drink by doing one of the following: Heat the water to a rolling boil for at least 1 minute (at altitudes greater than 6,562 feet [>2,000 meters], boil water for 3 minutes). Recreational water includes water in swimming pools, water parks, hot tubs or spas, fountains, lakes, rivers, springs, ponds, or streams that can be contaminated with feces or sewage from humans or animals. Blastocystis 'hominis' infection can cause a variety of intestinal signs or symptoms, which include Abdominal pain Diarrhea Constipation Gas or flatulence Greasy stools that tend to float Upset stomach or nausea Patients also report fatigue, skin rashes, and joint pain. Some people with Blastocystis 'hominis' infection have severe symptoms, while others have no symptoms at all. In this class of disease, researchers have found that people with more severe symptoms may be infected with more virulent types of microbes, and also may have a genetic makeup which causes the microbe to produce more severe illness. Contact your health care provider. After using the toilet and before handling or eating food, especially while having diarrhea. How long after infection do symptoms appear? Avoid food that might be contaminated. Using chemicals may be less effective than boiling or filtering because the amount of chemical required to make the water safe is highly dependent on the temperature, pH, and cloudiness of the water. My child does not have diarrhea, but was recently diagnosed as having Blastocystis 'hominis' infection. Click here to sign up to be a BRF member Blastocystosis (Blastocystis 'hominis' Infection) Print Version (PDF - 48 KB, 7 pages) What is Blastocystosis? Practice good hygiene. For more information on recreational water-related illness, visit CDC's Health Swimming website. Swallowing recreational water contaminated with Blastocystis 'hominis'. Assist or visually supervise young children and other people you are caring for with hand washing as needed. If so, runoff from rain or flood water may be draining directly into your well and causing contamination. OR Use a filter that has an absolute pore size of 1 micron or smaller, or one that has been NSF rated for "cyst removal." For information on choosing a water filter, see CDC's Fact Sheet A Guide to Water Filters. This can occur if your well has cracked casings, is poorly constructed, or is too shallow.
